Skanska awarded $23.8 million contract for second building on new Texas A&M University–Central Texas campus

Houston – Skanska has signed a contract with Texas A&M University – Central Texas to construct a $23.8 million, four story, 135,000-square-foot facility on its new Killeen campus.

Currently serving more than 2,400 students, A&M-Central Texas offers classes at several convenient sites, including a 672 acre main campus in Killeen. The land was transferred to The Texas A&M University System from the U.S. Army in 2009 and the first building on the site was completed in May 2012.

Skanska is building phase two of the new master planned campus. This facility will be home to the campus library, counseling center, career services, school of education, social work program, distributed learning and instructional technology, and will provide additional office, classroom and laboratory space.

The project architect is Good Fulton & Farrell Architects. Construction for the project began in December 2012 and is expected to be completed by March 2014.
