Skanska USA Adds Two More to Expanding Blue Bell Office

New additions bring wealth of experience in business development and supplier diversity

Philadelphia, Pa. - Skanska USA announced the additions of David Strange as vice president of business development and Sherry Nacci as diversity coordinator to its Blue Bell office, bringing to seven the number of hires in just a 30-day period. The firm has increased its staff in the region by almost 10% in the past 6 months.

“Skanska’s continued success growing our presence in the Greater Philadelphia area has allowed us to create new positions and attract top-notch talent at a time when many businesses have been reluctant to add employees,” said Ed Szwarc, general manager and executive vice president of Skanska’s Philadelphia region. “We are thrilled to have such experienced professionals with deep roots in the region bring their local knowledge and relationships to Skanska. David and Sherry will enable us to expand our client and supplier base while redoubling our commitment to diversity.”

As vice president of business development, Strange will utilize his 37 years of marketing experience and expertise in the local Philadelphia market to lead the sales efforts locally and help expand the firm’s business in the region. In addition to being a skilled marketing executive, veteran team leader and construction expert, Strange most recently served as vice president of business development at Shoemaker Construction Co., where he nearly tripled the firm’s annual revenue. A lifelong resident of the Greater Philadelphia area, Strange graduated from the University of Delaware in 1973 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration/Marketing.

Nacci has joined the team as diversity coordinator and is serving as chair of Skanska’s Pennsylvania and Washington D.C. diversity committees where she will coordinate subcontractor outreach programs, meet with potential diverse subcontractors and encourage and assist in prequalification efforts. She will also be the main contact for the firm’s involvement in diversity-related organizations and associations and attend local career fairs to help human resource team members with outreach. Nacci, who is also a lifelong native of the greater Philadelphia region, graduated from Camden County College in 1981, earning a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration.
