South Jersey Technology Park Center Receives LEED® Silver Certification

Parsippany, N.J. – Skanska USA Building Inc. announced today that the Samuel H. Jones Innovation Center, which is the first building completed at South Jersey Technology Park at Rowan University, received LEED Silver Certification from the United States Green Building Council. The $12 million dollar project is located in Mullica Hill, New Jersey.

The project is a mixed-use facility, and includes laboratories and laboratory/office space for private organizations and for the University's College of Engineering sponsored research and clinics.

The Samuel H. Jones Innovation center is the first of 25 planned buildings on the 200-acre mixed-use campus.

“We are tremendously pleased with the efforts of the entire team in achieving LEED Silver Certification,” said Skanska Senior Vice President Paul Nylund.

Skanska completed the Core & Shell for the center in December, 2007.
